Carmarthenshire Registry of Growing Sites

Carmarthenshire has long been dubbed the 'Garden of Wales'. In recent years, interest in local food growing opportunities has increased in popularity. There is evidence supporting the idea that gardening can have benefits for both people and the planet, whether through physical and mental well-being or by reducing the number of food miles on our plates.

At the time of writing there are thirteen recorded growing sites across the County, covering an area of over nine hectares. Some are allotments whereas others are community growing spaces or land shares that lease out individual plots or raised beds. These spaces are managed by town and community councils, third sector organisations and community groups, or private parties. Each varies in size, cost, and the facilities offered. A record of sites including contact details can be found below. Please note these are subject to change.
